

One-Day Seminar on Leading Transformational Change

In the world of leadership, it is often said that if you are not living on the edge, you are taking up too much room. Creating transformational change is more than just living on the edge: it requires that leaders create the edge.

Creating a whole new edge means that the leader must think differently, seeing things from a new perspective, so as to set new horizons of development that were not previously considered achievable. The purpose of this seminar is to better equip leaders for the demands of transformational change within their organisation.

The seminar analyses and discusses the value of the implementation of the 2-T Model of Transformational Change; the two styles of leadership (Transformational and Transactional) and their integration that a leader must develop in order to lead an organization successfully through transformational change, and the five Strategic Practices needed to facilitate transformational change.
